Lana Gets Her Talk/ Lana recouvre sa langue

2017 37:08 min Beth Wishart MacKenzie

A cinematic observation of Indigenous artist Lana Whiskeyjack as she works to complete a mixed-media sculpture of a tortured face, the face of her uncle. Lana calls the piece "Losing My Talk". This brief study of an artist and her work helps us come to some understanding of the trauma experienced by Canada's Indigenous people in the Indian residential school system, of its enduring effects on the children of survivors of the IRS, and of one woman's journey to recover what was lost: dignity, identity, and voice. A story of resilience, Lana's journey speaks of the power of Indigenous "ways of being" in our time.

"This film highlights the critical importance of wildlife in our urban ecosystems." - Jason D. Lusier, Assoc. Prof. of Biological & Environmental Sciences, Le Moyne College

With the help of thoughtful and passionate scientists who have come to understand and love them, we find out what makes scavengers tick. We debunk myths about them. We ask...What adaptations have they evolved to do their job? What benefits do they provide to humanity? How can we humans work with them, so that they can do their job even better? By the end, we may not all see nature's cleanup crew as beautiful creatures the way some scientists do, but we're likely to be willing to give them the respect they deserve.

A challenge common to rural communities the world over is taking place in Pictou County, NS where there is sharp division over the fate of the local pulp mill. To correct a historic injustice the mill must, by law, stop flowing pulp effluent into the tidal lagoon next to the Mi'kmaq community of Pictou Landing. To keep operating the mill has proposed a controversial plan to redirect its effluent into the environmentally sensitive fishing grounds of the Northumberland Strait. Fishermen say "No Pipe". The mill says "No Pipe No Mill". A line has been drawn and with jobs at stake the issue has reached a boiling point.

Finding Peter Bryce

2018 23:30 min Peter Campbell

All Andy Bryce knew about his great-grandfather was that he lived in a big house in Ottawa, and wrote Canada's first Health Code. But when he opened a box of family mementos, he discovered that while working for the federal government, Dr. Peter Bryce had uncovered health abuses in government-funded Residential Schools. His book, The Story of a National Crime: Being an Appeal for Justice to the Indians of Canada, published in 1922, revealed these abuses publicly. As Andy pieces together his ancestor's role in Canada's troubled relationship with Indigenous people, he reaches a new understanding of the need for reconciliation.
