L'ÉQUIPE CLIMAT DE PARCS CANADA

2023 Pivotal Pictures Inc.

Coasties

Our shorelines are certainly feeling the impacts of increased storms and their velocity. But with the help of Canadians taking Coasties (a selfie of the shoreline) Parks Canada is able to monitor this change on a daily basis and pivot more quickly to support local ecosystems and wildlife populations battered by the effects of these storm systems.

Coasties

Nos littoraux ressentent certainement les effets de l'augmentation des tempêtes et de leur vitesse. Mais avec l'aide des Canadiens qui prennent des Coasties (un égoportrait du littoral), Parcs Canada est en mesure de surveiller ce changement au quotidien et d'intervenir plus rapidement pour soutenir les écosystèmes locaux et les populations d'animaux sauvages qui subissent les effets de ces systèmes de tempête.

Creating a Forest

Healthy forests can help mitigate the effects of climate change on surrounding urban areas. Restoring and connecting ecosystems within Rouge Urban National Park requires knowledge from many sources and experts. This episode focuses on the aspects that are taken into consideration when planning on returning an area to its native forest. Beginning with input from Indigenous partners to the collaboration with the Toronto and Region Conservation Authority nursery, we follow the process from seed collection to busloads of volunteers from the 10,000 Trees planting blitz.

Créer une forêt

Dans cet épisode de l'Équipe Climat de Parcs Canada, nous allons à la racine de ce qu'il faut pour qu'une région retrouve sa forêt indigène ! Découvrez comment, au parc urbain national de la Rouge, nous améliorons les écosystèmes avec l'aide de partenaires autochtones, de l'Office de protection de la nature de Toronto et de la région et de 10,000 Trees. Ensemble, nous restaurons les forêts et apprenons l'importance des écosystèmes naturels dans un contexte de changement climatique. Plus de forêts = des espèces et des gens en meilleure santé et plus heureux!
