Not Quite That
Audience Choice Award - London Lesbian Film Festival
 An intimate and insightful exploration of identity through the lens of Sarah: a 57-year-old Jewish butch lesbian navigating life's complexities. For Sarah, identity is multifaceted: she grapples with being seen as both Jewish and not, a mother in every sense except biological, and frequently mistaken as transgender. Additionally, her journey as a breast cancer previvor adds another layer of complexity to her sense of self.

As Sarah reflects on her experiences and challenges societal norms, viewers are invited to contemplate the significance of how we perceive ourselves and how others perceive us. Through Sarah's story, Not Quite That delves into the nuances of identity, belonging, and the importance of being fully seen and understood.

Ultimately, this documentary serves as a poignant reminder of the complexities of human identity and the significance of acceptance and visibility in shaping our sense of self.

Analogue Revolution: How Feminist Media Changed the World
Warning: This video contains some brief images from archival women's magazines and films showing nudity and graphic portrayals of the human body. Viewer discretion is advised.

Set prior to the Me Too movement, Analogue Revolution traces the rise, fall and resurgence of feminist media and activism in Canada. The stirring film features Susan G. Cole (Broadside Feminist Review), Grace Channer (Our Lives Black Women's Newspaper) and Dykes on Mykes, the longest running lesbian radio show in the world. Rare archival footage, like 70's feminist gatherings in Montreal, lead to the film's climax: draconian cutbacks to women's and lesbian organizations across Canada, following the massacre of feminists at École Polytechnique in Montreal, (December 6, 1989). The film concludes with a resurgence: younger BIPOC feminists (Ella Cooper, Black Women Film!; Didihood Collective), using analogue strategies to create new feminist digital networks.

Finding Bobbi
HUMAN RIGHTS AWARD - Mystic Film Festival
Finding Bobbi tells the story of actor Bobbi Charlton's long, courageous journey through gender dysphoria. After half a life in the wrong body, Bobbi transitioned at the age of 53. This transgender woman's incredible story is funny, heartbreaking and ultimately life-affirming. It chronicles her experiences as a child, adolescent and adult struggling to understand and express who she really was at a time when there was no real acceptance of transgender people in mainstream culture. The film follows her return to the stage after a twenty-three-year absence, playing Aunt Eller in a gender-bending production of the Rodgers and Hammerstein classic Oklahoma! at the Oregon Shakespeare Festival.

A Bullet Pulling Thread
Can quilting change the world? Renowned quilter Marilyn Farquhar was devastated when police killed her brother after a mental health crisis. So she created Kairos, a series of quilts as a way to process her grief, spark conversations about violence and motivate change in policing. Marilyn was a superstar of the quilting world who never made her artwork political. Then in January 2020, the RCMP shot and killed her brother, an activist who fought for the rights of the homeless in the town of Abbotsford, BC. His 911 call for help summoned an army of police officers, snipers, a K9 unit—but not a single mental health worker.

Now Marilyn is on a quest to confront law enforcement with her pain and share her quilts and experiences with those who knew her brother.

Manufacturing the Threat
Shining a light into the murky world of police infiltration, incitement and agent provocateurs, Manufacturing the Threat shows how Canada's policing and national security agencies, granted additional powers after 9/11, routinely break laws with little to no accountability or oversight.

Manufacturing the Threat is a thrilling and emotional film, which examines a deeply disturbing episode in Canadian history when an impoverished couple was coerced by undercover law enforcement agents into carrying out a terrorist bombing. Traces the infamous 2013 case of John Nuttall and his wife Amanda Korody, both converts to Islam (taking the names Omar and Ana). The couple spent three years in prison for planning a terrorist bombing before the courts found they'd been entrapped by undercover law enforcement.

The Chinese Diaspora

China is home to one of the oldest continuous civilizations on earth and for much of its history has lived isolated or semi separatedly from the rest of the world. Home to many exotic goods, it has long been a trading nation and it was only in the 19th century that it needed to send its citizens abroad to work. This migration formed the Chinese Diaspora . While some were free settlers seeking wealth abroad others were indentured workers popular with the former European powers as cheap Labour after the end of slavery.

Between the Stones and the Ocean: A Portrait of Rudy Wiebe

Rudy Wiebe is one of Canada’s most cherished and acclaimed writers and renowned for giving a literary voice to Indigenous peoples. A two-time Governor-General’s Award winner, his novels, short stories, and non-fiction books are provocative but compassionate tales about Western Canadian history and his Mennonite heritage. During one golden autumn on the prairies, filmmakers followed Wiebe around Saskatchewan and Alberta as he reflected on his experiences in a landscape that has informed his destiny as a writer and produced the epic stories for which he’s celebrated.

Capturing Cooperman: A Not So Private Investigation of Howard Engel

Howard Engel is the creator of Canada’s most enduring crime fiction series and private eye, Benny Cooperman – a rumpled, unarmed, decidedly quirky, Jewish detective. Not exactly a stereotypical crime fighter. Filmmakers capture the man behind the sleuth from his early days to his many professional successes. This documentary pays tribute to a remarkable author who suffered a debilitating stroke that left him unable to read, yet not only did he return to writing, but according to reviewers and critics, has never written better than in his most recent work.

Al-Rashid: The Story of Canada’s First Mosque

This documentary tells the unknown story of Alberta’s early Muslim pioneers and how their historical contribution — the Al Rashid Mosque — has touched and influenced the lives of three generations of Muslims living in Edmonton. The mosque was constructed in the depths of the Great Depression, and officially opened on December 12, 1938. At the time there were less than a thousand Muslims living in Canada, and in Edmonton the majority were Lebanese. Through memories, photographs and archival films shared by three generations of the Hamdon family and other descendants of the mosque’s founders; we discover the roots of Islam’s establishment in Canada.

Did Nazis Invade Canada?

In this compelling WWII documentary, stories from Canadian history explore dramatic threats the nation faced from Hitler and the Nazi movement. Astonishing stories of a Nazi occupation in the middle of the country; of a Canadian Führer aiming to take over the government, and of German U-boats destroying ships in Canadian waters. But are these stories fact or fiction? Through expert interviews, rare archival footage and audio recordings, this engaging film will separate reality from spectacle.

After Fact:

“What does journalism look like when lies trump truth, clicks control the news, and layoffs abound? After Fact is an unvarnished portrait of real-life news work in Canada. A broadcast investigative journalist uncovers a policy chasm that puts schoolchildren’s lives at risk. A small-city reporter watches colleagues’ desks empty as she fights to believe her job still matters. A tough young City Hall reporter puts a human face to decayed housing. Canada’s first crowdfunded independent journalist covers city council with no other reporters in sight. Filmed over the course of three years during a cataclysmic shift in the business of news, After Fact documents what we all stand to lose in the face of journalism’s decline.

BUTTERFLIES ON THE BRINK

The Story of the Mottled Duskywing

Butterflies on the Brink is the gripping tale of a rare butterfly species' fight for survival on the edge of extinction. The Mottled Duskywing butterfly, found only in a handful of habitats in Ontario, is vanishing at an alarming rate. Witness the inspiring efforts of a dedicated recovery team as they work tirelessly to bring this species back to its former range. Through painstaking research and groundwork, they are determined to reintroduce these butterflies and, in doing so, accomplish a momentous achievement in butterfly conservation in Canada. However, their ultimate triumph depends not only on their own efforts but also on the butterflies' ability to withstand the ever-changing climate, invasive species, environmental degradation, and unforeseen challenges that lie ahead.

For three years, Pinegrove Productions closely followed biologist Jessica Linton and her recovery team. They documented their endeavours in the field and inside the Cambridge Butterfly Conservatory lab, where the team strived to raise thousands of Duskywings. Their ultimate goal? To successfully reintroduce this critically endangered species back into its natural habitat. The resulting documentary is a captivating tale of triumphs, setbacks, and the unwavering dedication of a group determined to secure the future of this enchanting butterfly.

"To me, this is a love story that is the heart of our relationship with our sibling species. Against a tidal wave of mass extinction, it is inspiring to watch a devoted group working to restore one species of butterfly to a habitat from which they had been extirpated. This reveals how hard it is in a degraded world and how much we have to learn."

- David Suzuki, CBC Nature of Things

"Great documentary! An inspiring tale of a team of dedicated scientists on a multi-year effort to reintroduce an endangered butterfly and how the threats to that one species have implications for an entire ecosystem."
